THE LAUREA

Published by the Junior Class of Middlebury College
1909
To him whose personality has ever been before us, whose hand has ever pointed out the paths of ture knowledge, whose voice has inspired us to greater endeavors, and whose whole influence has been toward scholarly and gentlemanly conduct, to him, our honored
President,
we, the Class of 1909, do dedicate this book
PRESIDENT EZRA BRAINERD, D.D., LL.D.
IN the work of bringing again to light a Middlebury year book, in looking into all departments of the college life, comparing conditions here with those obtaining elsewhere, and contrasting them with those set forth in Middlebury annuals of earlier times, there has been constantly before us one personality above all others, a man with whose name every reform, every progressive measure for twenty-three years has been inseparably linked, our honored President, Ezra Brainerd, D.D., LL.D., of the class of '64.

When Dr. Brainerd assumed the presidency in '85 it was to enter upon a tremendous and seemingly thankless task. That Middlebury College had passed its time of usefulness was a not infrequent judgment. There were but forty students on the roll; the facilities were woefully inadequate; ultra conservatism held iron sway. When one looks at the institution to-day, its beautiful campus, its new and imposing buildings, its two-hundred and more of wide-awake and enthusiastic students, and realizes to whose leadership all this is largely due, he cannot attribute too great honor to the man whose untiring efforts in the face of such gigantic difficulties have made these conditions possible.

The administration is about to change. The good work in which the retiring president has so faithfully labored will go on. But however great and useful the college may become, however widespread its influence, to no man will our gratitude and veneration be more due than to him who, through years of crisis labored so heroically for the results of which we are the witnesses and partakers in this year of 1908.

To President Brainerd, therefore, this book is affectionately dedicated.

Once again the Laurea is presented to the alumni and friends of Middlebury College; and through its pages the undergraduates wish to extend most cordial greetings to all.

The purpose of this publication is threefold. In the first place we wish to bring the graduates into a more pronounced realization of what our student activities really are to-day, to show them the new form, and the old time spirit. And then, we hope to make it clear to all that we are on the "up" road and still going. Finally we desire to advertise our beloved college to her own alumni, and awaken the dormant affection of every child to the glow of patriotic enthusiasm. And so the class of 1909, stimulated with this purpose, have resurrected the dust covered Laurea to effect the object in view.

Our task has, indeed, been difficult, for we were forced to build on untried theories; but in our blind advance we had a star of guidance in an honest purpose. The labor this work has cost was given most willingly; and now we present what has been done, hoping the reader will appreciate the real object in view, and forget the errors of execution.

Eight years ago the first Laurea, standing at the doorway of the centuries, spoke of a new Middlebury. It was a prophecy; and to-day that prophecy is fulfilled. To-day we recognize the new Middlebury; and it is that "New" we represent. With the spirit of reform enthusing our very being, we stand amidst the reviving activities and behold a glorious sunrise of spiritual and material prosperity, the promise of a triumphant day.
The Laurea

1900---1908

The rest is broken; and from sleep profound
She raises up her head to gaze around.
What scenes are there that tell of days gone by?
What old familiar objects greet her eye?
There is the ancient chapel,—'tis the same;
The lofty bell still rings the old refrain
To sleepy students in the ivied walls;
But what about these stately marble halls?
The time she whiled in dreams, the years unknown
Have built the New, and older scenes outgrown.
The Laurea for some eight years has slept,
Has lost those years, while Time has onward crept;
And now awaking, startles at the view
Of old, familiar scenes lost in the new.
Alone the memory of the Past may sing,
Its spirit clinging where the ivies cling,
Or, chance, abiding in the chapel tower
To ring its anthem at the rising hour.
That spirit's here; but all its dress is new;
The dusty customs bathed in morning's dew.
That "old" is what the "Laurea" once did know;
This "new" is what we want our book to show.
No height of talent do we writers boast;
But moderate thought, a joke, or gentle roast,—
A hand reached out to link us with the past,
The Laurea to make the welding fast.
R. JOHN MARTIN THOMAS, of the class of 1890, is the president-elect of Middlebury College. During the commencement of 1908 his inauguration will take place, an event that will place at the helm of our institution a man in every way fitted for the great responsibilities he has been called to assume. He has been fitted, unconsciously, by a life of constant preparation and by those inherent qualities that so characterize him as a man, a leader, and an educator. It is an instinct with him to know men; an instinct which, coupled with educated ability, places him where he belongs, in the foremost rank. That critic spoke truly who said, "He is a rare man from every point of view, a scholar, a thinker, an admirable speaker, a sterling and inspiring man." He is a man of the truest character, and to this we may add, "of ability, of keen insight, of sound judgment, and of great love and sympathy for young people." Such is the nature of him who is to succeed our honored President Brainerd. To him is entrusted the guidance of our college; and upon his shoulders are placed the responsibilities of educational manoeuvre and of directing the mind of young manhood and womanhood. His task will be great, the problems perplexing; but the opportunity of usefulness to his fellowmen is large indeed.

Dr. Thomas will find the old college in condition for steady progress. He will find an institution surely founded, and proved by over a century. He will, moreover, find a scholarly and experienced faculty, a body of loyal alumni, and the support of enthusiastic undergraduates. A sure man is at the helm and we fear no storm of the succeeding years.

"A few strange chords were touched; and then, the song surpassing sweet filled all the hall; and after that, we went into the dark out-doors, our lives made grander by remembrance."

"Nearly there!" Yes, that's so. But the goal is not so attractive as it seemed. Not that the attainment is disappointing, not that we have overestimated its worth; but rather we underestimated the worth and strength of fellowship and familiar association. All the pleasure of attainment is drowned in a sea of memories, is destroyed by the pangs of separations at hand. The reward seems shadowed by the cost. As one to take a long journey into a lone country, we prepare to face the world, and bid tearful goodbye to friends and home, sweet alma mater. We would prefer to wait a while longer, to spend a few more happy hours beside the Otter's dreamy course; that we might live those days again, or pursue our learning and living in dear old Midd. O memory, our hurried day has numbered out our hours of stay, and singled out the "when we part;" and soon we'll drift into the "dark outdoors," alone with thee. Now as we gather in the evening stillness to watch the sun repose itself in night, the atmosphere of sadness pervades us and gathers on our hearts as twilight dews upon the ground. 'Tis as it should be, for we say, "farewell" to comrades, the dear old college and fellow students. The blessings of four years are on us; our blessings, alma mater, are with thee.

We do not care to here present our inner pages to the world. Our lives, our tears, our ambitions, and our incentives are our own. We care not how the world may speak, for we, ourselves, know. So let us quietly grip each friendly hand and let all know that our hearts are anchored in "old Midd" tho' many, many miles of distance intervene.
Here ends an epoch, an epoch here begins.

The Senior's Farewell

I

When son or daughter,
Must leave a mother—
Deep grief and sorrow,
Will ever follow,
Though parted, closer
They grow together
'Tis love—their standard—
That speeds them onward;
Her true devotion,
Their deep affection,
Naught here can sever;
They live forever.

II

Dear Middlebury—
How can I leave thee!
Dear Alma Mater—
I'll love thee ever;
At thought of parting,
My heart is throbbing;
Thy love is matchless;
Thy worth is endless;
Thy star ascendant,
Gives light resplendent!
Fountain of Knowledge—
Farewell—Dear College.
The Junior

When we look back on our college course, how short it seems—three of the four years which at first seemed endless are gone, and we have left from them only a little added knowledge and our recollections. Memories—but such memories as they are! What loyal son or daughter of '09 will ever forget how we dropped our Odysseys, filed like Indians down the chapel stairs, crawled out the chapel cellar window, raced over the rough, sodden fields, climbed into our special, then sat at the car window and sang as two lonely sophomore girls ran back to give notice of our freshman banquet. And our banquet—it has been the watchword of success ever since it occurred.

Who needs to be reminded of that dance we held in Masonic Hall, or the bills we had to pay after it. Even the shafts of the green paper were so blunted that they left us unharmed. Truly the freshmen have their troubles, but they also have great compensations.

Then we came back as sophomores, sadder and wiser, through freshman flunks, prepared to study. We did study, too—physics, cats, zoology, and looked forward to sophomore hop as the oasis in that educational desert. Nor did we look in vain. Ask any member of '09 if he had a good time at his soph. hop. The chapel stage custom was resurrected for us during this year, too, and we still tremble at the thought.

Another blow came to us. Owing to outside pressure we voted "not to get out any green matter." We never have had a chance to tell you officially, 1910, what we think of you, but we still think it. Then we passed Buddy's zoology.

Now we are dignified upper classmen, burdened with junior responsibilities, doing our best to set the freshmen a good example. Now as we stop to think and ponder it comes to us more clearly every day, how soon we shall have to miss the dear old college, the happy give-and-take of college life, the faces of our friends; and no matter how often we come back 1909 will never come again. And we realize that we have learned one of the deepest of our college lessons, that our best and pleasantest memories are not all formed by enterprise, success, and fun, but by kindly actions, earnest work, and the generous giving of those who have borne with our faults as foolish freshmen, careless sophomores, and struggling juniors.

The Soph.
The Sophomore Boast

O, reader, pause a moment here
And note the 19-10 career;
And smile in pity, as you greet
This empty boast and vain conceit.

On September 20, 1906, a notable class entered Middlebury College. Sixty-seven strong they impressed faculty and upper classmen, alike, by their air of quiet dignity and capability. They at once realized that here was a class not to be trifled with, a class determined to do or die.

The annual Freshman-Sophomore warfare began.

I hesitate to tell the tale,—
To let you know a soph. could fail.

But 'tis all too true. Not many hours had passed away before the freshman colors waved triumphantly from the chapel spire. The freshmen had done a good job and the banner looked nice up there, so it did seem rather mean of 1909 that they took it right down next morning.

"This only goes the rule to prove That war and true love don't run smooth."

This little episode which showed the freshmen spirit, only made the sophomores more determined to win the hat scrap. But ill-luck came upon them here; for this first bloody issue was a victory for the freshmen, a victory by the margin of one hand. And so our poet sings,

"Ah, sophomores, here you met your fate;
You never thought you'd find your mate."

Weeks passed by and the time for the class football game arrived. The grounds were crowded with spectators. Freshman banners waved defiantly out to greet the sophomoric colors, making them green by reflection. But try as we might, even in spite of our valiant fight, we could not get sight of the sophomore goal.

"So 'twas a tie, where we got tied
Up in a knot and nearly died;
But on the Q. T., 'twas like the rest,
We claim our score was really best."
All this time the sophomores had been eagerly awaiting freshman banquet. Then they would surely get it in at "those freshmen." The time came. The scrap was hard, nevertheless all but three freshmen got off leaving many sophomores strewn by the way. This event closed the hostilities of our first year. We could only await the coming of 1911, hoping that contrary to all expectations, our glory might remain undimmed by future developments.

The opening of our sophomore year found us with diminished numbers but undiminished valor. Undismayed by the numbers and sturdy appearance of the new class we commenced the warfare at once. Our banner went up and what is more stayed up for seventeen hours. Then it was torn down; but no freshman flag waved in its place, because, as yet, the freshmen had no colors, except the proverbial green of nature.

The hat scrap which occurred soon afterwards resulted in a score of 5—8 in favor of 1911. But, of course, the freshmen had more men (editor's note: Yes, more real men).

The freshmen held their banquet during the first two weeks of college, at a time when many were out of town on a football trip. To be sure they got off safely, and, according to their own account, had a most enjoyable time. We cannot help but think that they would have had a better banquet had they spent a little more time in preparation. But there is no accounting for freshmen vagaries.

The Freshman-Sophomore football game resulted in a tie. May it always be so!

Our sophomore hop was notable as being the best dance of its kind ever given in Middlebury. (What a lie.)

We strive for quality not for quantity. If perchance there are others struggling toward the same goal, who desire an example let them look at and imitate the present sophomore class of Middlebury College.

"And now we bid you all adieu,
Hoping you'll read this record thru;
Sorry there is no more to tell,
Because we like to talk so well!"

"WHERE THY FAMILIAR SPIRE APPEARS"
The Fresh
1911---Its Career

The career of 1911 may, to this point, have been short, but it has been equally glorious. In September there entered at Middlebury one of the largest classes ever enrolled in this college. Nineteen eleven is now over seventy strong.

The first event of the college year was the hat rush between the freshman and sophomore boys. Perhaps it was an omen of what was to follow, that the class of 1911 won. About this time the sophomore banner, which had been waving mockingly over the chapel, disappeared, and the only reason that a freshman flag did not take its place was that it was, as yet, too early for the class to have chosen their colors.

Less than two weeks after college opened the freshman class had organized and chosen officers. Then on September 28th came the banquet; it is an old story how plans were made and kept undiscovered until it was too late for serious interference. It is sufficient to say they got off all right and reached Rutland safely. Here, in the Bardwell, was held the banquet, followed by toasts and speeches. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing; and it was not until the next morning that they returned, decidedly less festive, but just as happy and proud as when they started out.

The weeks that ensued were quiet, on the whole; but there came occasional rumors of the class football game. This great event came off shortly before Thanksgiving recess. Now anyone who saw the game can vouch that it was a "pretty contest." There is no denying that the freshmen had the best of it. However, the score was 0 to 0—but decidedly in favor of Miller's men.

Then followed a period of peace and scholarly application, until the week before Christmas, when came the new and trying experience, examinations. But even examination week must end, and the first term was over.

It is probable that the remainder of the year will pass away without any notable happenings as far as 1911 is concerned, unless appearance on chapel stage be counted as an event. That is surely something. But whatever may take place in the college, 1911 will be on hand to do their little part; for their spirit was well expressed by a certain one when he said, "I'm with you, fellows."

Where, O Where Are Our Loyal Alumni?

The undergraduate of to-day is occasionally reminded of the impressive past of Middlebury College, of the enviable list of its alumni who wrought well for the progress of the world. These pioneers builded well for themselves in the temple of Truth, and their laurels have brought imperishable glory to the "College on the Hill," an advance post of enlightened, intelligent, practical, patriotic citizenship. The lives of most of the early alumni who have left their names written in indelible characters on the rostrum of honor were lives of self-sacrifice, spent on the skirmish line of progress.

When these facts are acknowledged freely and voluntarily by representative men who are loyal sons of other institutions of learning, every son of Middlebury has a right to feel proud of his college, and the facts should be an inspiration to him for the shaping of his own life's ideals.

There are many ways in which this inspiration has come to the students of Middlebury College in the past; but above all there is one way in which it should ever more be manifest, and that is through personal touch of alumni and present day students. Every graduate who has entered the civic body is himself a lesson of life, and an eloquent subject for campus vivisection. Middlebury College has done its best to fit him to take up an honorable rank in society; if he has not benefited in full by the privileges that were put at his disposal by the founders of the institution and by the men whom the trustees have seen fit to appoint as his instructors, men generally who have had experience with life, who are scholarly, who are animated by but one desire: to develop him into a useful factor, his is the blame, not the College's. Everyone, however, successful or not, has incurred a heavy responsibility toward his Alma Mater that can never be fully repaid. The more the world has given to man, the more man owes the world. The more the college has done for the alumnus, the more is expected of him; he should not shirk this responsibility; he should at all times, under all circumstances, take a loyal interest in the welfare of the college, bring his knowledge of life, his experiences of life—bitter though they may have been—to the present generation of students.

Isn't it a fact that every year about Commencement time, no matter where one may travel, one meets everywhere on the trains bunches of men, young and old, on their way to join the joyous chorus of loyal sons of their Alma Mater? This is true of every New England College; this was true of Middlebury a generation ago, we are told. Commencement used to be the Middlebury Festival, a regular Midsummer Nights' Dream acted out in full, when alumni and friends of the college came to greet the ever-young Mother and wish her Godspeed; and they looked each other in the eye, they reminisced, they told of their successes and of some failures, they spoke of the good things they had seen others do, and they dwelt affectionately on those they had done themselves—and they gained new courage.

O temporal! O mores! a mere handful of alumni—twenty on the average:return in these latter days as regularly as the song birds; but where, where remain the younger alumni, where the men and women, between 21 and 45? Glad as we are to welcome back the "Old Faithful," we would be equally glad to welcome back the "Young Brigade."

Instead of twenty, two hundred of the alumni is the smallest number we should of right expect; all should gather and be in line on Baccalaureate Sunday, by their presence among us lend dignity to the occasion, infuse enthusiasm into every one of us here through every day of Commencement week, become mutually acquainted, not go off in cliques, but by a spirit of personal loyalty help keep the spirit of loyalty to the College at fever heat, and by our reverence for "Dear Old Midd," make it manifest that while other colleges may be just as good, there is none that rises superior to ours; none that is lodged deeper in our affections.

Middlebury is a small college; we are proud of the fact; we are even prouder of its achievements. It is in the small college where the spirit of loyalty to the college reigns supreme, that men are fitted to take high rank among the noble and good of the world.

The list of our alumni presents a wonderful record. This record can be kept up so long only as the spirit of loyalty and a little self-sacrifice are unmistakably evident. With only a handful of alumni returning for commencement, there is not any particular incentive for the undergraduate body, excepting the senior class, to remain through the commencement exercises, which, under such conditions, degenerate into a perfunctory affair. The example for this spirit of loyalty should of course, first of all, be set by those who have accepted responsible administrative functions on the board of trustees. Just take a look at the list of members of this board, and it will be seen that they are not living so far away but that every one of them could visit the college and the class rooms once or twice each and every year, bringing an inspiring, encouraging word to the students and hold individual converse with the members of the Faculty relative to their departmental organization, work, and needs; that would be the only correct way of finding out what's what, and who's who, what we have to work with, what we need to make the college better, more successful; and finally, by each member considering it as his strict duty to attend all the meetings of the board during the commencement days, come to those meetings fully conversant with the situation, talk matters over intelligently, buckle right down to hard work and find ways and means to make provision for what is needed; it is said, however, that there are members of this board who, since their election to office have never attended even a single meeting. That is one of the great troubles of self-perpetuating bodies! Not until the alumni of Middlebury College are given active part in the election of trustees and to some extent in the management of college affairs, shall the college blossom out again into full fruition. There are of course the few among the trustees who think well of and work hard and unselfishly for the college; all honor to them. But what a different college we would have if all together, unitedly, came to talk over the interests of the college, formulate some policy looking toward expanding the influence of the college, and then each one faithfully carry out the work allotted to him! This is not fiction; it is a statement of facts without any intent of acrimonious criticism. It is a simple, straightforward reminder in the hope that it may bring about a heartier cooperation between trustees, faculty, alumni and undergraduates.

And is not this the moment to take action in the matter? Are not conditions now in the "nascent state?" The morale of the undergraduate body was never better than at the present time; the spirit of loyalty was never deeper seated; the college spirit stands paramount, and was never better organized than now. Everything is ready, is in the best possible shape for Middlebury to take a step forward, when all of its alumni and friends can bring new life, new energy, new lustre to the dear old college.

Are the trustees, are the alumni ready to take the necessary steps to consummate this plan and bring about a grand Middlebury reunion at the College's next commencement, to speed the parting and to welcome, at the same time, the new president, and to bespeak for him our loyal support to help him develop Middlebury College to the full capacity of its usefulness by every means in their power?

The undergraduate body—over 200 strong—have already taken action in this matter and pledged themselves, without exception, to remain together during the entire commencement week to welcome back our alumni, give them a right royal time while amongst us, and in a spirit of concord, union, resignation and self-denial give impetus to the new era that is about to open for the college, dear in the past, dear now, and dear forever to every one of its children.

Blow, winds, blow
And, breezes, sigh
O'er fields of snow,
And tree tops high;
Let all the chill of the storm-king flout,
And loose itself in the snowy rout,
For the winter drear,
All cold and blue,
Has reached us here
By the Otter, too.

II
Sing, men, sing
A song to cheer,
A song to ring
The echoes here,
The echoes that dwell in field and wood,
The echoes that leap with the leaping blood;
Let the heart be warm
Tho' the world is cold,
So silence the storm
With a song of old.

Bye and bye,
The spring will come
When the sun mounts high
And the insects hum
Round the flowering sweets, that the lavish hand
Of springtime strews thru' the awakening land,
Then sing once more,
While the welkin rings;
Now your task is o'er
For nature sings.

To establish a Christian organization in connection with any institution of learning can have but one purpose, the moral and spiritual uplift of the men and women who spend their student years in that institution. It was this purpose which actuated the men who first sought to place Middlebury in the swift current of active Christian work. Hardly had the college obtained its charter when the Philadelphian Society, an organization whose aim was the highest welfare of the student body, came into being. This organization thrived for nearly eighty years, and during that time was the nucleus about which the Christian zeal of the college gathered.

In January, 1882, the Philadelphian Society gave place to the national Young Men's Christian Association. This gave a new impetus to Christian work in Middlebury, for it placed the college association in close touch with similar organizations in all the educational institutions of the country.

It has been said that a man must either rise or fall during his college course. That is to say, these are the supreme years of testing. All through its history the Y. M. C. A. of Middlebury has fully recognized this fact. And it has striven to cope with this condition by giving each student who comes to college an opportunity to engage in active Christian work, and to keep ever before him the vital claims of the Christian life. We are happy to say that the earnest Christian workers who have gone out to various fields of usefulness bear witness of the degree of success which has attended the efforts of the Association. The Y. M. C. A. extends a welcome to every man in college. Amid the distractions and allurements of college life, it asks each man to fix his eyes upon the star. of Bethlehem, following the light of that star until it shall lead him to the manger of high ideals. It pleads with every man to seek a clean life and to appreciate the supreme delight in such a life. It invites each man to keep his heart-glow of religious experience by an earnest study of God’s word. And the Association has no great cause to complain.

In proportion to the number of men in college, the membership list of the Y. M. C. A. does not present a discreditable showing.

The working plan of the Y. M. C. A. has been in most respects the same for many years. On the second of each fall term, a joint reception of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. is held in the Egbert Starr Library. The object of this reception is to welcome the Freshmen, and to awaken a general feeling of good fellowship. A canvas is made of the student body, and the roll of membership secured for the ensuing year. The regular devotional meetings of the Association are held on the Tuesday evening of each week, at seven o’clock. The attendance at these meetings is not what it should be, but the general average is good. Three Bible classes are now in operation in connection with the Y. M. C. A. work. The first class is open to Seniors and Juniors, and is under the leadership of Prof. Wright; the second class is open to Sophomores, under the leadership of Herbert E. Boyce. The third class is for the Freshmen. There is cause for congratulation in the fact that the Freshmen hold a weekly class prayer meeting in connection with their Bible study. This is, indeed, typical of the new vigor in the Christian life of American colleges.

PROGRESS is the genius of the Middlebury Young Women's Christian Association. From its founding in the spring of 1894, when the work of the association was of an entirely religious nature, to the present time, when all phases of college life are intimately connected with its work, the association has experienced a gradual, yet steady growth of power and importance in the college world.

The membership at present is seventy-nine, a little more than ninety-six per cent of the enrollment of the Women's College. But the strength of the association lies in the weekly meetings which are well attended. It has really outgrown its present quarters. The devotional life of the women is quickened not only by the weekly service, but also by Bible study for which there are, every year, two classes, well supported by the members of the association.

The Middlebury association takes a real and vital interest in missionary work. This interest is stimulated by the study of missions for which there is a class. The missionary enterprises of the association are of a two-fold nature—general missionary work and home work for the poorer children of the town. The former consists in contributing to the support of the World's Work, the work of the New England committee, and two missionaries, Miss Blake in Turkey and Miss Newall in India. The home-work is in charge of the extension committee, which has classes for the little girls of the village, whom they instruct in sewing, and all the while try to influence their lives in the direction of true Christian principles. The missionary work is supported by pledges.

The more an institution supplies the real needs of a community, the more important that institution becomes. More and more the association is providing social life for all. The custom of giving a reception at the very outset of the college year is kept up by the social committee, and a joint reception is given annually by the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. At this the associations express the interest they take in college life and affairs. An association banquet is a new and attractive feature devised by the committee of 1907-'08.

A new committee has been added in the association, namely, the Silver Bay committee, for the purpose of interesting the members of the association in the Silver Bay conference and raising funds to send delegates to the same. Last year only three delegates were sent from Middlebury, but it is the aim of this new committee to send three times that number this coming summer. About fifty dollars were raised in the fall by sales and pledges, and by the end of the present college year this fund will have increased three-fold.

The association has reason to thank God for its prosperity, and earnestly desires to live up to the responsibilities of that prosperity.

REALIZING that the college of to-day is judged, to a very great extent, and especially among the younger generation, by its standing in college athletics, we aim, in the following pages, to show exactly what Middlebury is doing in this line of college activity.

Athletics here are not what they should be, though, under the circumstances, they are far in advance of what would be naturally expected. The past few years, and especially the last, has seen a wonderful awakening along these lines. But it is only an awakening.

To our alumni we would say: "Compare this department of our annual with the same space in volumes representing our sister colleges. Note wherein it lacks, and then pledge your efforts toward securing for the alma mater, which we know you love, those things she lacks in athletics!

First of all we desire to see our alumni represented on the governing board of the association. Your advice, your guidance, your aid is necessary to the achievement of what we aim at in athletics, as it is in the other departments of our college government, and only by thus coming into vital contact with the undergraduate body can you aid in placing our sports on a basis where we may compete on equal terms with our sister colleges.

Should you wish to know what Middlebury can do under favorable circumstances, we point with just pride to what she has done and is doing under very adverse circumstances, the story of which you will find in the following pages.

THE late and unusually severe spring handicapped the development of the baseball team very materially. Frequent snows and rains kept the diamond too mushy for use, while the rest of the field was a small sized pond. Up to the first game there had been less than a week's out-door practice. Nevertheless that game proved the metal of the team which Captain Gove and Old "Si" put onto the field. The material for this aggregation was new and somewhat raw, but on the whole was very good and bids fair to be an important factor in this year's team. As with all good teams, there came the usual mid-season slump. In this particular case it was due to the poor physical condition of the players. By the end of the season, however, "Midd." had gotten back into her earlier trim and won easily from Norwich and Rensselaer.

Now, here again in the development of a baseball team the vital need of a gymnasium is felt. Every year we are decidedly handicapped by the late and uncertain season. Other teams begin their work during the winter; and they not only get their men into fine physical condition, but also get the fundamental exercises worked up. Of course teams with such advantage stand a little higher in the sphere of successful athletics. Yet Middlebury's pluck and spirit has done much to gain her the place of consequence that she holds. And the near future may bring surprising and interesting results.

Football

Football has ever been the chief of Middlebury's sports, in spite of the fact that the task of turning out a football team from our extremely small numbers is at first sight colossal.

It is but natural then that the thrill of new life, which has begun to make the blood tingle in the veins of the student body should first manifest itself during the past football season.

A memorable season, for it marks the beginning of better and greater things for Middlebury's athletics. A spirit of love and enthusiasm for old Midd herself, starting from small beginnings to be sure, but gaining headway with each passing day, swept like a great wave over the student body.

The college attended the home games almost in a body, headed by a drum corps, and filled with enthusiasm for the team which was to represent Midd. on the field. Before many of the games college smokers were held for the purpose of rehearsing yells and songs. These functions were largely attended by student and faculty, and at each the all-pervading tone was "Loyalty and love to 'Midd'." Indeed many an affectionate sentiment toward the old college was brought to light, the existence of which the possessor had never suspected.

But what, you ask, was the cause of such an awakening of college spirit? Well, many things lead up to all great events and many people and circumstances have to do with all important historic upheavals, but in almost every instance there is one man who stands cut as the one who was instrumental in bringing affairs to a head. So was it here; and that man, dear to the student body of Middlebury, is David Austin. "Dave" is a coach, but he is more than a coach. He is a gentleman, and a man who knows things.

The Commons Club of Middlebury College

"O gain at the least expense all the benefits of organized fellowship" is the slogan of this club. It aims to give its members the social, parliamentary and literary training of a fraternity without paying the fraternity price.

"The college not the club" has precedence. Indeed, the clubstands a rebuke to cliquism. College politics are tabooed. It is college spirit, college expectations, college glory that is emphasized.

Inclusive rather than exclusive, it invites to membership all students not affiliated with a fraternity having a charter at Middlebury. The club is united to the National Commons Club, other affiliated societies being the Norwich Commons Club, the Wesleyan Club, and the Kasa Club of Brown. Others, as the Hitchcock Club of Amherst are probable members of the near future. The union has as its general purpose the promotion of college democracy.

The Middlebury Club is very fortunate to have as sympathetic co-workers the Loyal League, while the faculty has given its God-speed.

O silent group, grown gray with passing years,
Kissed by the sunshine and the ivy green,
And soothed by shadows long where gray trees lean.
Old guardians of youthful hopes and fears,
Long life be thine! until the future clears
A path where yet thy glory may be seen,
Unchanged and changeless, throned in starry sheen.
Grown brighter as each coming century nears.
Change not nor be thou changed by any hand!
The voices of the past would live to speak
Their protest; and from corners of the earth
Where they who love thee toil, would voices band
To save thee—Live on, live on! They seek Thee still who know thee for thy changeless worth.

Song to Middlebury College.
(SO LONG AS FLOWS THE OTTER.)

Words by FRANK A. FARNSWORTH, Jr.

Music arr. by THEODORE HENCKELS.

1. Dear Middle-bury, ev-er-more Thy sons shall sing thy praise; And proud-ly hear thy noble name
   The length of all their days. Thou givest free the stores of Time, And friendship true and seem to tell
   Of triumph's banner furled, Still round us glows the golden haze
   Of student days gone sweet; Thou throwest wide the gates of life, And guid-est sure our feet. So long as flows the

The Metamorphosed Rusticus

A Satirical Unmask delivered before Professors Farrell, B.B., and Hopkins, A.B.D., by certain of the Woman's College.

Conscripti Patres

Rusticus, being the hero and composite representative of Freshmen in general;
Praeses, the benevolent and learned ruler;
Diabolus, the Sophmoric king;
Malevolent, lieutenant to Diabolus;
College Widow, such as everyone knows;
A Senior, one particular senior;
Messenger, one clothed with authority to collect bills;
Plug, fairy attendant on the studious and scholarly;
Crews, Sophmoric, Junic and also Senic;
Confederation of Trotters, a primal Freshman organization;
Spirits and et cetera at proper times.

Prologue

To ye who burn for learning's crown
And ache to drink all knowledge down,
Whose thoughts soar to the higher sphere
Where only ghosts of life appear,
To ye who would on classiques dine
Here where the ancient ivies twine,
To ye these lines address themselves
Conjured by magic of the elves,
These lines, full of the valued thought
By many a costly lesson bought,—
These lines to teach each neophyte
What threads divide the wrong and right.
Attention, then, that you may know
The road each rusticus must go.
Invocation

O thou Euterpe, sweetest Theme of Verse,
Whose voice inspires the wedding bells and hearse,
Fair lady of the liar, do thou attend,
Lest in this burst enthusiasm end.

[Scene discloses campus collegium apud Medioburiense. Enter Rusticus with diploma in hand. Makes way up "via scientia," during the while invisible spirits of the atmosphere burst into a strain of most melodious melody.]

Spirit song:

"O knowledge is a valued thing.
So plug, so plug.
Ambition's notes doth glory ring,
So plug, so plug.
Amidst the stars thy mind be set;
Plug like the deuce lest you forget,
Then you will get there, you can bet.

Ad astra per aspera.

Rusticus (soliloquy):
From lands afar I came when day was young,
To greet the day, again, in Learning's realm,
To greet the sun when early morning, clad
With russet mantle, walked in eastern dew,
That sun whose shafts of gold reflect
From yon high tower, monarch of the hill.
Urged on by Thought's insistent self
I seek my way unto the wisest clan.
I seek to mark a future and a course
In Learning's path, or live among the stars.
Enthusiasm for a fuller life
Doth stir the soul to touch the end of things.
Determined then, as Buster Brown might say,
To reach the goal though rough may be the way;
And through the trials besetting learn of fame,
And midst the stars write an enduring name,
"Ad astra per aspera" I will place
As worthy motto, full of potent grace.

[Ad hoc tempus, a burst of celestial music, thrilling Rusticus. Interim, enter chorus scholorum led by Praeses.]
Praeses: O, stranger, whence came you and why? What land claims you as son, which sending You forth to this realm of Thought, You seek here what? And by what right? Your motive, sir, in all sincerity I now demand.

Rusticus [tremblingly presenting diploma]: This is my right.

Praeses [smiling blandly]:

Ah, thus it says. You’re welcome here. Nor strange is it, methought I saw The purpose written in thy face, A resolution, firm to seek That good existent in the realms Of higher thought, to spurn the ill, Renounce the world. We read thy mind As though it were an opened page From which that picture, conscience, gleams, An illustration of thy thoughts, Or outer reprint of the soul. You come, young friend, to spend your time,— Most precious time—in studious zeal, To delve in Understanding’s pool And course the mighty stream of knowledge To the head where, only, you may find The source of all that’s good and fair. There Virtue’s canopy is spread O’er the resplendent throne of Truth. O, pilgrim of a purpose true, Unto this hill we welcome you.

Chorus—Senior Division:

We welcome you, O pilgrim wise, To this our home so dear. We trust you’ll open up your eyes To what surrounds you here.*

* This appears, to the best authorities, to be a subtle inference of what follows, for the sophomores follow in as Rusticus, etc., exit.
Junior Division:
The best in life is often hid,
Or clouded from the view;*
In passing, therefore, let us bid
That you seek out the true. [Exeunt.]

[As they go out, the Sophomoric crew troop on, waving paddles. They sing:
Sophomoric Division:
As Praeses says, we welcome you
To-day, to-day;
We'll see your education through,— Hooray! hooray!

They burst into a frenzy of accentuated gyrations. It is the paddle dance. Diabolus ambulates vivaciously forward and pronounces in stentorian numbers
Enni, meni, mini, mo;
See the little freshie go;
Burned with intellectual thirst,
Freshie's head is like to burst.
Study, study, is his cry,
While the youthful moments fly,
Study, study, cram, cram, cram,
Praeses's precious, pretty, lamb.
Now the burden of our song:
Praeses's youth has started wrong;
Licked a boot,—and that's a sin
So its here his woes begin.
Sophomores, then, with torch and mask
Be up and doing; tis your task
To begin this self same night
Setting little freshie right.

Diabolus, with crew joining in, sing.—

PADDLE SONG
To-night he grinds, to-night he grinds
Away in his dingy den.
O drag him away to the judgment room,
Close hid in the gloomy glen.

*Here the vital question of every beginner is hinted at. "For what shall the midnight oil be burned?"
To-night he grinds, to-night he grinds
    At the tasks we set for him;
Beset by fiends and fearful foes
    His fate is dark and grim.

O drag him away to the woody hill
    Nor heed his cry and moan
But let him face the awful king
    Of Sophomores on the throne.

Then paddle him, then paddle him
    This very selfsame night;
That’s the only way, our daimon’s say,
    To set a freshman right. [Exeunt]

Enter Rusticus loaded down with compendious volumes of classique lore and verbiferous dictionaries with Praeses in tow.

Praeses, gazing heavenward:
    Hear me, thou ever faithful sprite,
    Thou daimon of the earnest mind,
    Dear Plug, devoted guide of thought,
    Hear me and come.

(Plug katabases from chapel tower and sits on shoulders of Rusticus):
    My bidding do,
    Attend this youth, and ever by his side
    Be thou his inspiration and his guide. [Omnes exeunt]

An interval of peaceful afternoon ensues. Then the shades of night steal in from East Middlebury, and the campus collegium is enrapt in the mysterious mantle of darkness.
It is all quiet; only the rattle of Bob Steele’s truck is heard in the distance. The little stars have chased the sunbeams from the sky.
Diabolus and crew, heavily cloaked, sneak stealthily upon the scene.

Diabolus:
    Tonight he grinds, tonight he grinds,
    Away in his dingy den;
    He buries his mind in musty books,
    No place in his heart for men.
He wastes his time with foolish lore,
A base, unworthy deed;
So number his faults and failings, and
We'll finish his trial with speed.

First Complainant:
His coat is short, his trousers, too;
His whole garb is a fright.—

Malevolent:* Throw him in the Otter, then;
Perhaps that'll make it right.

Second Complainant:
My lord, his hair is monstrous long;
It's most like a load of hay.—

Malevolent: 'Twere charity to cut it then,
And take his load away.

Third Complainant:
He is goody, goody, mamma's boy.
For he always tells the truth.—

Malevolent: Therefore a paddle plaster for
So sanctimonious a youth.

Fourth Complainant:
He licked a boot, and that's a sign
He'll get Phi Beta Kap—

Malevolent: It's time he got his licking, then,
This pusillanimous chap.

Diabolus: You have spoken well, and we have heard
His failing and his fault;
So drag him away to the sentence room,
That dark, uncanny vault.

* According to Prof. Hopkins, A.B.D., author and critic of note, Malevolent is one of the most tragic characters of classique drama.

 We feel that the dramatist stepped too far here. How could the complainant have found out the veracity of Rusticus in so short a time? Nevertheless this line does much to keep up the intense dramatic strain.
Malevolent go get the man;
   Nor do you waste a minute;
But haste you to the Chipman's top,
   As though the de'il were in it.*
[Omnes exequant cantant que remigii cantum].

Scene changes to solitary spot on Chipman hill. Sophmoric band assembled in court. Diabolus presides. Enter Malevolent dragging Rusticus by the hair, Plug fearfully floating in the rear. Awful silence.

Diabolus:
Approach, O Messenger, and lead
Thy charge before this tribunal.
Make him to do obeisance, for
His life hangs in the balance; and
A hair may swing it up or down.
Upon what charge of crime do you
Present this one; for Equity
Demands we hear a fitting charge.
Else he would meet condemnation
Ere a word; his every sin
Is lettered in his face. But speak
And we the awful court will judge.

Malevolent:
O, most wise judge, most gracious judge,
Our charges are of many sides,
And such that paint the deepest dye
Of villiany in man,—in man
When in the baser hours of Life.
His crimes are those that make the blush
Of honest men grow pale with shame,
For they depict the shere descent
And diminuity of soul
Man may attain and yet—be man.

* This speech gives a clear insight into the inner character of Diabolus. The fourth word of the last line line is unorthodox—extremum.
 Here, again, Malevolent is permitted to exceed truth and reason in his statements; but the idea is to impress the affair upon the mind of Rusticus.
He seeks an empty vanity,
Promotion's gilded pinnacle;
He basely stooped to Praeses's foot.

[Groan from court]

He wastes his Nature-given hours
In seclusion of studious den.

[Groan from court]

His eyes are shut from brother man,
His soul is locked from others' souls,
While all his heart is wrapped in lives
That were, but now are spent and nought,
Or else a dust, or memory's ghost.

[Deep groan from court]

Neglecting all prerogative
Of custom and of decency,
He boasts a strange unsuited suit,
Outlandish garments that appear
One from the other much estranged,
And all from reason. Nature cries
In honest horror at the sight.
Sooth! he is evil or his mind's not right.

Diabolus:

Woe, woe, to such as he
Who paints Truth's varnish on a heart
That's canker bit, and much unsound—
But I reserve my judgment till
I hear the never erring voice
Of this my wise and august court.
O, you most learned, profound of thot,
Is this man guilty—or is he not?

All Court:

We deem him guilty, reverend lord.

Diabolus:

Have you at hand, in speech or mind,
A reason why this court should pause,
Or hesitate to now pronounce
The judgment and the sentence due,
According to our just decree?
This doom* I pass: Guilt of the first degree.
You'll spend this night in misery
And lose the locks from off thy brow.
We'll execute the sentence now. [Exeunt].

At this the attendant spirit, Plug, floats away and evanesces in the cold gleaming of the moon beam that finds its way into the forest. Scene mutates itself.

THE SECOND PART

Dealing with the metamorphosis

Scene discovers a ball room, brilliantly lighted and accoutred with all deliciousness.
Enter a senior with college widow.

Senior:

Dear lady, as you may know
At opening term the country side
Does perpetrate upon us here
Its motley—such the freshmen are.
Well named they are; they ever come
In all the freshness of their ways
That soon does label them "Immature."
So are we blessed this very term;
And we the annual burden bear
Of rectorship. It is our task
With such means as we have at hand
To start these raw recruits in paths
That lead to proper equipoise.
A task it has this year become
Of such importance, so responsible,
As through the very nature of
One certain man it needs must be,

* "This is one of the rare uses of doom; and here it seems to have a double meaning, not ambiguous, but diplex." Prof. Boyce's Assays.

 The dramatist now leaves the action of this night to the imagination of all. There would be much painful memory restirred in the presentation. Besides gentle mothers might be unnecessarily frightened. The initiated of yore can undoubtedly call up a vivid picture of what really happened that night. (Editor's note.)
We dread the entire weight and wish
To place, as usual, upon you,
Who well discern the ways of men,
Some of the tax and worry, and
Some function of accomplishment.

Lady:
Indeed, kind sir, you deftly hint
A compliment; but you infer
A duty, too. Whate’er it is I’ll bear my part.

Senior:
No vain trust, sure!
Well, here’s the circumstance and such.
A youth named Rusticus has come
Into our midst. Him must we teach.
But he is strange beyond all wont.
He thinks exclusion his best friend,
Exclusion from contact with men,
Men that should touch the sleeping string
That fills the chord of kindred hearts.
He seeks companionship with books,
And leaves the keys of life to dust.
What need is there of further facts?
You know his type; I vouch his worth.
You, and only you, can bring
To light that vital strain of gold
Which lies in every human heart.
Make him assume, as wisdom can,
A proper sympathy toward man.

Lady:
This trust, I ever will hold dear;
I’ll do your bidding, never fear.

Senior:
And so, you claim our liberal thanks.
Ah, here he comes. I’ll make the chance;
And, pray, be mindful of my clan.*

* This word, clan, refers to some organization.
Senior fetches Rusticus to the lady and introduces them.

Senior:
Here are two friends of Learning; and
I trust your interests will prove mutal. [Exit].

Lady:
This meeting gives me much pleasure.

Rusticus:
Indeed, it brings me much delight.

Lady:
And, with your pardon for my whim,
I mean to take advantage of
This opportunity, thus giv'n.
So let us seek some quiet nook
Of confidence.

Rusticus:
Your pleasure's mine. [Exeunt to conservatory].

After a proper interval they return.

Lady:
Now, since our frank talk, I feel
As if our brief acquaintanceship
Had been of some long standing; thus
Our common sympathies have made
Time minister on them, and us.
Your confidence I'll ever keep
Heart-locked, yet ever in my mind.
A treasured sentiment it is,
Provoker of those kindred bonds
That link two beings, 'though apart.
Count me your friend,—persuade yourself
That I am worthy of the trust.

Rusticus:
But you do honor me beyond
All ken. My gratitude, if only
I could loose the fetters of Incompetency that forbids
A liberal tongue to work its will,
My sincere gratitude would weigh
You down.
Lady, (smiling): Forbear! I know thy will.

Rusticus: Ah, if you only knew the heart.

Lady: Forsooth, I knew that quite as well, An' what of that? Indeed I do.

Rusticus: I am an opened book to you; You read me at your pleasure—

Lady: And a pleasure always, 'tis to read.

Rusticus, (in blushing confusion): The book is at your hand to read.

Lady: My library then's complete. But come, and say, when there's a chance, You'll test my claimed sincerity. The clouds will sometime gather in Your sky.

Rusticus: My hopes you already know. I'll claim your grant when Worry comes To chastize Hope—Ah, even now— Methinks—Yes here it is.

Draws a letter from his pocket.

So soon I have the instrument to prove Your faith. I have here a letter, A grievous letter, a hostile letter. Pray note the tone and help me out.

Reads:

"To Rusticus C. D. Whey:— It pains me very much to say You failed to reach the requisite 60 per cent, so you will sit Next Saturday amongst the rest Who have to try again this test."
Was much surprised, this day, to note
The many strange things that you wrote.
My faith in you received a jar.
Yours very truly,
Myron R."

Lady:
Indeed what humor! What a joker!
The consummation of his wit!
I'd laugh at him, if 'twere not sad,—
If 'twere not sad he puts such stress
On matters of such trivial 'count.
O, his is energy misplaced.
Be not cast down, 'tis but the course
Of ordinary happenings.
You failed to pass, but what of that!
To pass such things is for the crew
Of pluggers, not for men—like you.
Who'd waste his brief and valued hours
Counts not his intellectual powers,
But rather parrot memory.

Rusticus:
You lift a heavy weight from me.

Lady:
These words are not mere flattery,
Not bubbles which we raise to please,
Idle, empty, none of these.
Their truth in school I learned—experience.

Senior enters.
Senior:
I think I have a claim upon
You for this dance.

Lady:
In truth you have.
And now I'll say farewell to you,
My Rusticus; soon we will meet
At function or on village street.

Rusticus:
I trust we will; till then, adieu.

[Exit Senior with Lady].
Till then, I live not, but endure
Events of space, time's sluggishness,
A mere existence. 'Od's! but what
An attitude is this I now*
Behold within me? Circumstances?
Aye. Change? Aye. What's the cause?
Her words—forsooth her words—they stick
Like porous plasters to my mind.
They seem to tell I'm aiming at
A mark unworthy, ends that take
Our cash; and render in return
A dulled and lonely-cold conceit.
She teaches virtue of the life
That deals with "man to man," the place
Reserved in life for each to fill,
Or the few lines we utter in the play
Are more for action, less for theory.
She counts me different and—By Joe, I'll be. [Exit].

Scene is changed to compartment of Rusticus, who is discovered sitting at a table in a luxurious chair. He is writing. Around the room lounge several individuals, kindred spirits. A condition of chaos exists. Air is blue with smoke; and lights glow dimly in the cloud. Books are piled in an out-of-way corner, dusty and neglected. A few dictionaries are used to support a couch, that sacrificed a leg to one of the many battles that, lately, has occurred. This is the convention quarters of the "Trotters Incorporated Association."

First Trotter, (scoring up):
Great game we had this afternoon.
It's a shame you missed it, Cicero.

Second Trotter:
A rotten shame. By Jupiter
I'd give the last cut that I have
To have been out to view the sport.
Macbeth just told me that they killed
The umpire. What jolly sport!

* The metaphychological mutation now makes itself evident. This speech contains climax of thought in the drama.
First Trotter: Oh, yes. But, then, it wasn’t very exciting. He passed away at the first swat—too easy, far!

Second Trotter: What was the excuse that they gave?

First Trotter: Oh, well, to make the story short, I’ll say; the game stood one to one when we went last to bat. It was the last half of the eleventh, too. Two out and Rusticus to swing. Well, Rusticus then laced the hide past center field. Gee, how he ran! First, second, third, he turned for home. He slid! It was a narrow shave and the so-called umpire called him out.

Second Trotter: And, then, they had a fight?

First Trotter: Oh, no. Nothing quite so exciting. They merely hit him with a club.

Second Trotter: At that, I’m bound it was good sport. That was the final of the set, so we have won the championship. Hooray, I wish I’d seen the game.

Third Trotter, (breaking in): I say fellows, great cigars. The old boy keeps on hand. He smokes the best, and has the same for friends. [Takes a cigar from box].

Second Trotter: He’s alright. But by the way this e’en he seems so melancholy. What weighs upon him.
Third Trotter: Oh, perhaps
   A gay device to raise some sport.
   Say, let us sing our evening ditty.

Trotters All: Let's sing!

SONG

I

"O study is a boresome thing!
   Away, away!
Let revelry the welkin ring
   Today, today.
Let’s merry be, nor pause to think;
   But glasses raise, and let us drink,
For our spirits rise to joyous clink—
   The Trotting Club for us, sir."

II

"Old Platus gallops in the lead;
   Hold on, hold on!
So saddle Hinds and Nobles' steed
   Urge on, urge on."

Rusticus, (interrupting):

Look here, fellows. How is this
   For classic comp. Old Cicero
Could not touch this. Now mark the work.

Reads:

"To Rusticus, the Elder:—
   Dear old dad:—
It's going onto two weeks since I've had
   A letter from you; so I'm much in doubt
What my paternal sire can be about.
How are the horses and the Berkshire Hog?
The hens and turkeys, and the good old dog?
In short, how's all the stock upon the farm,
Inclusive of the hired man and marm?
Remember me to all and Auntie Jane;
And say I hope to see them once again.
But I must close, and to my studies turn
To cram and cram—to plug, and learn and learn."
(Breaking off here Rusticus says):
Now that is what I call a stunning line.
It's worth a five-spot, if it's worth a cent.

(Continues reading):
“Well love to all, and mostly, dad, to you.
Write to me very soon; and, now, adieu.
Rusticus.”

P. S. “Oh, I forgot to say, I'm broken quite.
Many bills for books have come tonight.
If you can send me on a ten or two,
I'll try, by pinching some, to make that do.
It's mighty hard to keep above the crust;
But that's alright.
With love,
Your Rusticus.”

Second Trotter:
Now, that is diplomatic, I contend.
The highest genius never could have penned
A better line, a stronger line, forsooth.
You'll get the clinking essential, in truth.

Fourth Trotter:
By Flunk, I even hear the goodly ring.
Of all the statesmen Rusticus is king.

Knock at door. Enter Messenger.

Messenger:
Here is a bill, good sir, from L. S. Knight.
He says he hopes those trousers were alright.

Rusticus:
You tell L. S. he is a tricky brute
The trousers are too small. They do not suit.
To pay a bill like that comes mighty hard;
I ordered by the acre not the yard.

Messenger:
That's not my fault, so I am told to say
These several bills, neglected, you must pay.

Rusticus:
O yes, of course, of course, and without fail.
I look for money in the coming mail.
Messenger:

It is my painful duty—
Several of club jump on Messenger, knock him on the head and throw him outside.
Rusticus takes a seat, throws feet on to table, lights a cigar. The rest sing.

SONG.

I

To Rusticus, to Rusticus, our praises now we bring,
Of all the rusticusses our Rusticus is king.
Oh he’s a bonny lad, my boys, and we’re a bonny crew.
We cut and flunk, and play and sing—there’s nothing else to do.

II

Three cheers for Middlebury, and then three cheers for us,—
Three cheers for Hinds and Noble, and—three cheers for Rusticus,
For he’s a jolly sport, my boys, and we’re a jolly crew;
We never waste our nights at books, for there’re better things to do.
    And thus it ended, or
    We all woke up for the benediction.
The Campus

The brooding peace of years lies on thine upturned face,
   And in the evening still the twilight breeze
Sings low its gentle song of sweet goodnight,
   As in the long gone centuries.

Above thee beats the winter sleet and sighs the storm,
   Upon thee softly smiles the summer sun;
But with contented face thou liest e'er,
   While through Time's glass the grey sands run.

And o'er the scattered ways where they that love thee go,
   Though years are long and old that lie between,
They carry in their hearts thy vision still,
   With memories forever green.
Letters of A Senior

DEAR—

You can never guess what I am doing these days. You know how I loathe saying good bye. It has been a family byword for years that if there was any way of crawling out of a parting scene, I would find it. Well, I am saying good bye to all the places that seem to belong most closely to my college life. It isn’t so bad saying good bye to places as to people—mountains have not that uncomfortable way of making a lump come in one’s throat by indulging in tears, nor can a river pat one on the back and say, “Cheer up, the worst is yet to come,” which is father’s well meant way of putting my courage on the rack.

It is not that I never expect to see these places again, but I should like to have a very clear memory of them to take with me into the “cold, cold world” that is soon to be my fate. By the way, I wonder why people should have the absurd idea that a drop in the temperature is a natural consequent when the annual deluge of graduates is let loose on the world. It is surprising how attached one gets to these student haunts in four short years. I suppose it was just so with generations of students before me, and will be with more to follow.

Today I have climbed Chipman Hill for a look at the sunset. It was particularly glorious, even for Chipman, and the Adirondacks looked their best as if they knew that I was taking a memory picture of them. I know you will smile when I tell you that Chipman Hill has been a sort of panacea for all the trials that a college girl is heiress to. Whenever I was out of temper or had the blues, whenever I had made a conspicuously bad flunk or the day had gone very badly awry, I always started for Chipman. To begin with there was the walk. There is nothing like a good brisk walk for a dislocated temper. Then when one reached the top there was always a fine breeze to blow away shreds of resentment that were left, and who would dare to have the blues in the face of that great calm circle of mountains?

The diversions which rewarded the climb were endless. It was fun just to sit there idly pulling clover leaves and getting a bird’s eye view of the town and the winding creek with the chapel tower in the background. And when one had had one’s fill of the view there was always the delight of going home by the wood path where the pine needles lay so soft underfoot and the air was spicy with wood smells. It was quite likely that a squirrel or rabbit would venture across the path and sometimes one was lucky enough to hear the song of a thrush.

Do you wonder, then, that I have grown so fond of Chipman and that I said “thank you,” as well as “good bye?”

Yours in all the dignity of a reverend senior.

II

Dear—

More farewells! This time it was Beldens. Does that convey any meaning to you? I am going to try to make you see what it means to us college folk. The first mild pleasant Sunday of spring brings out from some corner of one’s brain where warm weather plans are stored for the winter, the tempting thought of Beldens. It seems to be in the air, and every one is equally susceptible to it.

College hill was never so alluring to a freshman as that stretch of railroad track is to us. The wind is sure to blow a gale, which twists our hats askew, but who cares—it brings good spirits on every gust. The pleasure of walking ties and maintaining a precarious balance on the rails is all the greater because it is accompanied by a sneaking sense that one is behaving in a childish and undignified way. There are pussy willows furring out beside the track and frogs shrilling away in the swamps; there is spring in the air. Three miles fairly melt behind one. Even the clay mud of the marble mill yard cannot stifle spirits put in a glow by the jolly April wind.

But it is the falls we have come to see. There is always new fascination in watching that endless sweep of the water which glides along smooth as glass only to tumble over and be dashed into foam on the rocks. There is always the same thought that the river is having a wild uproarious frolic and always the same half wish to have a part in it.

Today I tried to see if I could exhaust the pleasure of watching the Otter take that mad leap, but I came away as reluctantly as ever. The roar of the river followed me as if it were answering my good bye, and I sent one last cedar branch sailing, trying to make believe that I was only a freshman again.

Your reluctant senior.

III

Dear—

My fate rushes to meet me. In three days I shall be an alumna. Perish the thought. This has been a perfect day and I have spent the afternoon on the creek. The rest of the party did not know when I said my good bye. They were fortunate juniors.
The Otter deserves consideration even from a senior. It is such a dignified stream, at this point at least. You can get no conception of it from your fussy little river that babbles so frivolously. Its very look tempts one to laziness these first hot summer afternoons. One feels that it is quite the proper thing to row as if one had all time at his disposal, and was quite indifferent whether he ever got anywhere or not. It is all too easy to forget that one has anything to do but to let the cool water slip through his fingers.

It is so hot that even the bobolinks consider discretion the better part of valor, though here and there a black and white flash and a perfect cataract of bird notes betrays one. The woods are white with trilliums and look cool and inviting and in the marshy meadows a belated clump of marsh marigolds glows in the sun.

It seemed as if it had never been so lovely as today. We had meant to drift down in the cool of the afternoon, but a gathering storm warned us to turn the boat down stream. We stayed to see the thunder clouds roll up in the west and the lightning go zigzagging across the sky, till the first big drops spattered down. It was rather a bad ending but it fell in with the mood of these last days. Heighho, here endeth these carefree college days, and beginneth the wide, wide world.

Yours, still a senior.
We saw it first when the Autumn tints
   Made the old gray chapel glow,
And the trees flamed bright on college hill
   In that season long ago.

We saw it next when the still, white snow
   Lay deep on the dear old hill,
And the chill winds down the avenues
   Went whistling, loud and shrill.

We saw it again, when the tender green
   Of springtime clothed the trees,
And the faint sweet scent of bursting buds
   Was borne us on the breeze.
Dear to our hearts was the campus,
When robed in its garments of brown,
When clothed in the green of the Springtime
Or covered with Winter's white down.

And when in the days that are coming
Far away from its haven we roam
Our hearts with the deepest affection
Will turn back to the old college home.
It is probable that the majority of Middlebury's faculty, students and alumni have until recently been unconscious of the new society so suddenly sprung up in the very midst of the college life.

Strictly speaking, Gamma Delta Rho is not a secret society. Its officers are known, as are also its motto and flower. The significance of the three Greek letters, however, is never divulged to the uninitiated. While Gamma Delta Rho is not a secret society, it is rendered by one of the chief reasons for its existence a singularly exclusive one, since it numbers within its ranks only those who have been blessed with that especial dispensation of a kind Providence, "crinis ruber."

In view of this fact, it would be only fair to presume that the society is a highly-tempered one, and such is the case. Indeed, while there is nothing that in the least approaches internal strife, some of the debates between members are remarkable for the depth of feeling and originality of thought of which they give evidence.

The social functions of Gamma Delta Rho are beyond criticism. The dances and receptions given by the society are invariably attended with success, and the annual banquet is far removed from anything which the college has ever experienced in that direction.

At present it would seem that the society is destined to enjoy an exceedingly bright future, and it is to be hoped that all success may attend this new assembly of kindred spirits united in a common cause. All glory to Gamma Delta Rho! Long may she live and prosper!

"Conventiun is the web of custom"
"Custom does often reason overrule
And only serves for reason to the fool."

O you, who in 'the dear dead days beyond recall,' builted better than you knew, your Alma Mater sends greeting, and bids you return to reap the glory of your achievement."

Silence. Perhaps for the moment the statesman turns aside from his legislative schemes to call to mind the time when that same executive ability carried through his Freshman banquet with credit to his class and to its president; the merchant with a tender smile, beholds himself the youthful financier who accomplished the Herculean task of making door receipts and total expenditures balance at his Junior Ex. and so on ad infinitum. After all, they are pleasant memories for them. It is for us of this college generation, by our victories and defeats, our social triumphs and failures, mayhap, to store up the material for our memories in the years to come.

And such memories as they will be. Not, except in some rare cases, of the time when we flunked physics or logic, "omen obsit!" or when, in college parlance, "we pulled an A" in analytics, but rather of that estatic moment when we pulled the other fellow's leg in that hat scrap of our Sophomore year, or made a two-base hit for the naughty 'leven Barbs. Such events will be the making of our future college calendar.

There never has been, no, nor never will be a moment as breathless as that in which Sophomore and Freshman pause before the hat rush's dreadful fray. Even nature, or that piece located on or about college campus, seems hushed; the very chippies halt in their busy scampering and with tails aloft, like so many banners of the foe, sit in quivering expectancy. After the first dull sickening thud of head cracking against head, there follows as motley a collection of footwear waving in the breezes as ever graced a charity "rummage" sale. If, in the end, the Freshies win, as win they usually do, why quantity will tell; but if on rare occasions Mistress Fortune casts her lot with the "wise fools," it is quality that counts, forsooth.

From that time on the mischief's done, the warrior has caught the smell of blood. The air is thick with plots and counterplots. Each verdant collegian is a living embodiment of that wise saw,—
"I used to think I knew I knew,
But now I must confess
The more I know I know I know,
I know I know the less."

Some never-to-be-forgotten day, however, he blindly makes a dash for sleigh or train, lands, sometimes in the village inn and sometimes in the village lock-up; eats, drinks, but cannot be merry for he thinks of the maiden speech so soon to be launched upon the world; returns to Midd. in the wee sma' hours to find his room untidy even beyond its usual state; reads a few choice descriptions of himself in the annual edition of "Green Matter," then if his downy (?) couch by some miraculous oversight remains intact, betakes himself thereto; only to awake too soon to the fact that his Freshman Banquet is but a memory, a thing to dream of and to live over in retrospection, the joy of which can never die.

Or who can estimate the thrilling interest attendant on the Sophomore-Freshman football game? Then each doughty eleven strides out to do or die, while faithful to their colors, the fighters on the side lines yell defiance, sacrificing the whole catalogue of vocal organs to the cause. In the end, one side must needs tramp off the field, with valiant bearing and smiling faces, while in their hearts a requiem is beating to the measures of—

" 'Tis better to have played and lost,
Than never to have played at all."
or—

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these, 'it might have been.'"

And so practically ends the interclass strife, for in the spring dissension enters the house of Freshie and as in the days of yore, the Barbarian Horde and scanty scattering of Greeks do mighty battle wage.

"The classic Greek in fitting garb,
Doth cross bats with the savage Barb.
A derby's rim adorns his brow,
The only wreath of vict'ry now.
The Barb, for fixings shows contempt
And strides in garments all unkempt.
The outcome? Leave it to the gods,
We win—or lose, and what's the odds."
College life is not one continual round of conflict and mortal combat. There is a softer side, when under a flag of truce, doughty contestants lay aside their keen partisanship and mingle in gentle harmony. Will the impression made upon us in those early Freshman days ever be completely effaced, when we timidly found our way to chapel building, science hall or library, as the year might be, to receive hospitality from the Christian associations? In what a "Comedy of Errors" did we play a part, mistaking Senior for Freshman and turn about. Perhaps we stood in some dim corner, hands nervously buried in trousers' pockets, grimly awaiting release from this our first social agony. Ah, but those are our own secrets!

Oh, memory, what a capricious mistress you are, as you recall in turn the Sophomore Hop, the Junior Ex., the Senior Ball; each of the three prefaced by that little definite article which tells the whole story. Of course they were given by "our" class and were the most eminently successful of any in Middlebury's history. We do not think of the occasional taxes, bridging over the season from one to another, taxes, which kept so vividly alive the fact that as we had danced so we must pay the fiddler, the caterer, the decorator. Maid Memory is all too dainty a miss to have a mind for such realities.

She likes rather to think of that balmy first Sunday in April when—

"'Ed' and 'Co.,"
With footsteps slow,
Go up the track to Beldens."

or of the time in June when, freed from the forbidding pall of examinations, man and maid hie themselves forth on the long-looked-for "boat ride." At the end of the early morning drive, a lake, a pond, or e'en a babbling mountain stream awaits, it matters not, were it only a bucket of rain water, a "boat ride" has this occasion been dubbed and will be so remembered while there are lads and lassies in the "college on the hill."

The Washington Birthday Banquet is significant of our attitude in later years, marked as it is by utter absence of class or party spirit. There in the cheer of congenial comradeship our hearts swell with new love to the dear Alma Mater. We see about us her other children and, forgetting petty troubles and jealousies, remember only that we are bound by the common tie of love for a by no means common college.

And when, after four happy years spent under her protection, we sorrowfully prepare to depart, she sends us forth, according to that good old way of hers, down off the hill for the last time, accompanied by her sons and daughters, past and present, along the familiar way, to the still more familiar church, there to bestow the pledge of her faith and our labor (weak and poor at times), and there to hand down the still more precious heritage—that heritage which cheers and comforts and gladdens many hours, the memories grouped about Middlebury's customs.
A Song

Tune: Apply to Y. W. C. A.

When comes at length the time to say
   Farewell, farewell,
No lightsome joys its grief dispel,—
   Farewell, farewell;
But we enter on a broader life,
Of duty grand and manly strife,—
   Farewell, farewell.

Farewell, thou college dear to me—
   Farewell, farewell,
Our hearts with fondest mem'ries swell
   Farewell, farewell.
Too soon the days of thy charm are past,
Too soon comes 'round the tearful last,
   Farewell, farewell.

Thy children, now, with deepening love,
   Say one last farewell.
To thee we raise our parting knell,
   Farewell, farewell,
In gloom of night, or flush of day,
   Shall our zeal for thee ne'er fade away,
   Farewell, dear Midd., farewell.
Greek Room

Billy (shivering and trying to turn on the heat)—"Miss M—will you—ah—er—kindly be so good as to—ah—go on for us? Unprepared! I beg your pardon (puts down an excusable zero). I am sorry, Miss M—. Mr. —er—ah—Mr. F—, will you be so good as to go on for us? Also unprepared! (Puts down another sympathetic zero.) Ah!—how—er unfortunate I am in my choice of names this morning; has any one a spark of knowledge to help us on this er—ah—point?" (Takes a minute pointless pencil from his pocket, examines it and returns it.) (H—timidly raises his hand—Billy smiles.) "Mr. H—has a er—spark?" (H—hurriedly withdraws his hand.) "Oh—the spark has gone out. Let me offer you, then a poor faulty translation of my—ah—of my own." (Takes his book and strides around the room. Sits down again, takes up a little piece of chalk and gazes at it closely. Lays it down and draws out his watch, returns it and translates two lines, bends over and looks at his watch again.) (The last bell rings.) Billy—"As we close here let me suggest that you—er—look a little more attentively at Jebb and the other—ah—references put on the library shelf for your attention; they may—ah—may help you get at the thought in these paragraphs rather more easily."
Chemical Lecture Room

Mickey (with a chemically clean towel on his shoulder)—"Miss F—— recite. Give the symbol for water."

Miss F. (arising with a timid smile)—"H O."

Mickey (fiercely)—"Miss F——, please be serious about this; there is no such thing as ‘H O’ except in breakfast foods."

[Here a slight noise arouses Stevens.]

Mickey—"That’s right, wake up, Stevens. Mr. Show-brooks, recite. Give the characteristics of sulphur."

[Shewbrooks very uncertainly arises and ponders.]

Mickey (furiously)—"Mr. Show-brooks, what does a match smell like?"

[A moment’s silence and then the class howls.]

[Shewbrooks still looks uncertain and Mickey says with a grin.] "Mr. Show-brooks, the joke is on me"—turns to the class—"the next lesson is a review and at that time, I can assure you, the pleasure will be all yours."

[Last bell rings.]
An Episode

FROM NATURAL HISTORY

It was a dreary night. There was neither moon nor star to penetrate the awful darkness. For an instant all was calm and breathless with suspense. Then a blood-curdling shriek pierced the stillness. The very air shuddered with cold moisture.

A moment later the form of a man emerged from the shadow of a garden wall. There was a savage grin of satisfaction upon his hard visage as he seized the mouth of the bag with a firmer grip and, groping along under cover of night, soon disappeared through a window into the rear end of the Science Hall.

It was accomplished. The deed had been perpetrated. The morrow’s sun would see some poor, destitute, old maid or detached widow left in tears by the work of this night. The good old lady, by her lonely hearthstone, would never feel the thrill of that sleek fur, or those glossy eyes again.

A perfectly respectable tom cat, in his honorable vocation of a nightly melee, had been assaulted by a scientific enthusiast, and was now traveling that long journey from whence no cat ever returns.

"Requies-cat in pace."
The Green and Gold

In springtime, when each country street
Blossoms with tiny wild flowers sweet,
Buttercups nod at us from the grass,
And catching a gleam from their cups as we pass,
    We welcome the Green and the Gold.

In the summertime we see again
The nodding fields of yellow grain,
And there beyond, the forest trees,
Whispering to each passing breeze,
    Show us the Green and the Gold.

In autumn when each wind that blows
Warns us of the season's close,
Along the horizon's distant rim,
And on the mountains, far and dim
    Glimmer the Green and the Gold.

In winter twilights, cold and still,
When sunset crowns the western hill,
The pine trees standing dark and high
Against the flame of evening sky,
    Mingle the Green and the Gold.

The sunset fades from off the hill,
The autumn winds at last are still,
The spring and summer quickly go,
Still in our hearts will ever glow
    Love for the Green and the Gold.

For fondest thoughts of college days
Will ever rise from memory's haze
Close linked with hopes for days to be
When earth is radiant with thee,
    Beloved Green and Gold.
The editors of the Laurea, knowing that it is a great help to on-coming classes to see a sample exam., have collected a set of questions which seem to them most worthy of intellectual endeavor and most likely to help them through the Junior History course:

I

Locate as closely as possible by dates and give the unity and continuity of the following:—(a) Barbara, (b) Celarent, (c) Darii, (d) Ferio, (e) Cesare, (f) Bramantip.

II

Give nine general and twenty-nine specific excuses for chapel cuts and state when and to whom they can be used.
III

Explain significance of events connected with—Otter Creek, Bardwell House, Beldens, Pulp Mill, Chipman Hill, Bread-Loaf and Chapel Tower.

IV

(a) Give the difference, if there is any, between the Spanish Inquisition and Brynie's Physics Exams.
(b) (1) State at what time you can get into the bookstore; (2) And what the chances are that you can get what you want when you do get in.

V

Sum up the life and works in short, definite, numbered statements of—
(a) St. Augustine
(b) Bob Steele
(c) Billy Farrel
(d) Boethius

VI

State your idea of things in general, and give a synopsis of Robinson's History of Western Europe.

VII

Give the biographies with all the dates you can, of Hinds and Noble. State the effect on the intellectual life of Midd.
FACULTY IN REAL LIFE

“He was not only a chip of the old block; but the old block itself.”

J. B. V.:
“He’s tough ma’am,—tough is J. B.; tough and devilish sly.”

Prof. H.—“An individual cannot sue the state.”
Shewbrooks—“What could a man do if the state took his property, and did not pay what he thought it was worth?”
Prof. H.—“Well, Shewbrooks, he could go apart by himself and meditate on the mutability of human affairs.”
Chair of Natural History:—
"Notice the evolution of plants. The cowslip, the milk weed, the buttercup—."

S—"Wasn’t Joseph Jefferson a traitor?"
Prof. in astonishment—"Joseph Jefferson?"
S—"Yes, the president of the Confederate States."

Nursery Rhyme of Woman’s College:
"Little Maude Estey, dressed in her bestie,

And took little Maude Estey away."

A.—"I should think it would be dangerous for Hunt to smoke."
B.—"Why?"
A.—"The gas might ignite."

Wood:
"Quoth the raven, 'Nevermore.'"

Manchester:
"And I, a waif of stormy seas,
A child among such men as these!"

Perrigo:
"Once in the flight of ages past there lived a man."

Mary’s pet was mild and fat
Till Buddy saw it; then,
What once had been a lovely cat,
Became a specimen.

Fisher:
"Behold! the Great Gehiz, behold me."
Point of Hall's jokes:
"When found make a note of them."

Note:
When Wood comes on chapel stage, everyone is excused from church next Sunday.

Cadwell:
"Around my ears the scattered hairs are spread Eternal sunshine settles on my head."

J. A. V.:
Nature herself stood back when thou wert born
And cried aghast, "The work's not mine!"

Hunt:
"Hercules could not have knocked out his brains—for he has none."

Freshman—What's that sharp discussion going on out in the hall?
Senior—It's Teddy talking to himself.

Sleepy (from the other room)—Hey, Teddy, what time is it?
Teddy—Fourteen minutes past eight.
Sleepy—Wheu-eu uu! (rapid evolution of human animal into fashionable attire).

A—When is Wright not right?
B—He's Wright all the time.
C—Impossible!

Freshman, writing home—One of the social functions I enjoyed most this year was our first gathering on the campus. We were enabled to strike such close acquaintances.

Grouch (Senior)—For heaven's sake, go in that fellow's room and shut off the steam!
Willing (Freshman)—(Returns in battered condition).
Grouch—Didn't you do it?
Willing—I tried to; but it was him singing.
A,—They say the hash house is busted.
B,—O, don’t hash that stale news over again; give us something fresh; tell us when it is running.

A, in bed (sleepily)—Say, ol’ man, ’for you go out set my alarm for six o’clock, will you?
Old man (setting the clock for four o’clock)—Sure I will, old chap.

To Billy

’Tis said that patience is a golden thing
That shines most brightly if in constant use;
And when we think of all the toil we make
For you, through careless fun or deep laid ruse,
And still you smile and greet us fair.
We come to think, each of us all, that you
Are gifted with a patience ever bright,
And golden through and through.

To Teddy

Familiar sight that meets us everywhere,
Intent on duty or on business bent,
Responding to our greeting when we speak,
This little verse on you is wisely spent;
For when these joyous, carefree days are o’er,
And each must shoulder burdens one by one,
There’ll be no one to tell us in the School of Life,
“To hustle for the old bell’s nearly done.”
The Last Word

Well, this is our perpetration. It is all over but the cheering; and we don't expect that.—pass the bricks this way. In any case you would like to have a personal word with the editors or business manager, come to Waterbury or address a letter in care of the Incurable Department of the Insane Asylum. However, before we take a last farewell, let us bid you to investigate the respectable portion of this book, the advertisements. They are guaranteed and recommended, and should be patronized as the abettors and real supporters of such crimes as a college annual.

We anticipate building a refuge for disabled editors with the contributions of rock material which we shall receive.

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

Makes Irksome Correspondence An Easy Task

Waterman's Ideal alters the entire experience of a writing man or woman. It turns the drudgery of writing into a delight; it means working with a perfect equipment which makes every writing minute capable of more work in better style and with an ease which is in itself a pleasure. In all, it is the perfectly made pen, which, with the patented SPOON FEED—regulating perfectly the flow of ink to the point of the pen, and the clever CLIP-CAP insuring against loss, have made it the world's recognized standard writing instrument. Middlebury College

FOUNDED IN 1800

The College is finely located in the midst of a beautiful park in the village of Middlebury, Vermont. The locality is healthful, and the College offers the advantage of thorough instruction at a moderate cost.

The courses of instruction are of two kinds, required and elective, and each student is required to have at least fifteen hours of recitation a week. All the studies for the Freshman and the first two terms of the Sophomore year are prescribed. In the Junior and Senior years, nine and six hours respectively a week are prescribed, the studies for the remaining hours being selected by the student from the elective courses offered. These are numerous, and varied from year to year.

The College Library contains about 34,800 bound volumes. It is open to students every day except Sunday; all books are accessible to them, and complete catalogues indicate the location of each volume.

The departments of Physics and Natural Sciences are well furnished with apparatus and laboratories, while the Cabinet and Museum furnish abundant specimens for illustration.

The principal expenses for the year, except for clothing and text books, amount to about $243.

The income of various scholarships, a part of them under the control of individual proprietors and a part furnished by the State, is available to students of good scholarship and correct deportment. The income is applied toward the payment of term bills, including tuition. The liberal aid thus furnished reduces the college bills so materially that no student of energy need be deterred by financial considerations from entering the College. Requests for scholarships may be addressed to the President.

The Faculty, under the direction of the Corporation, give to the first third of each class, on the basis of scholarship, honorary appointments for Commencement. Those receiving these appointments are eligible for election to the Phi Beta Kappa Society, provided that they have attained an average rank for the entire course of eighty-five per cent.

The Women's College is under the control of the Board of Trustees of Middlebury College; it is designed for the present that the young women shall be offered the same courses as the young men, be taught by the same instructors and enjoy the same privileges of the Library and the Laboratories, and be entitled to the same degrees.

Students from such fitting schools as have thorough courses fully meeting the requirements will be admitted without examination, on the certificate of their respective principals that they have completed the courses and mastered all that is required for admission. Blank certificates for either the Classical or the Latin Scientific course will be forwarded on application.

For Catalogues and further information, apply to the President,

EZRA BRAINERD, D.D., LL.D.
